A Specific for all forms of Debility, Dyspensis. and Malarious Affections INSENG, the Cinchons of Chins, has been used for many centuries by the Chinese as a tonio, stimulant, alterative, and carminative. In all forms of Debility and Dyspepsis, as well as in Malarious affections, it has ever been regarded as a specific. Dr. F. PORTER SMITH, late Colonial Surgeon of Hongkong, says of the remedy:--

"Several cases in which life would seem have been at least prolonged by the taking of doses of this drug indicate that some positive officacy of a sustaining character does really exist in this species of Lywort. The Bitters are prepared from carefully selected specimens of the very finest quality of Ginseng, combined with other ingredients to improve the effect.

Instantly a familiar figure stepped off the sidewalk and shook warning finger, and the coolin awang back again to the left side. It was a policeman, no semi-Europeanized Mongolian, languidly performing a half-understood duty, as I had seen elsewhere, but the genuine home article, helmet, blue suit, silver buttons, regulation boots, truncheon and all-just "bobby." And his uplifted finger turns the traffic to the left in Shanghai precisely as it does in front of the Mansion House at home. A hundred yards farther on there was a flash of topped by a hage red turban, and clad also in blue and armed with the same truncheer. striding solemuly by on his beat. beyond him again is the Frenchified Chinese policeman. In fact, Shanghai is guarded municipally by no fewer than six distinct species of policemen-English, Sikh, Anglo-Chinese, French, Franco-Chinese, and the long-legged mounted Sikhs on sturdy white ponies who clank their long swords around the outskirts of the town, and carry terror into the turbulent Chinese quarters.

Modern Shanghui is divided, like ancien Gaul, into three parts: the English settlemen the American settlement, called Hongkew, and the French "Concession." The latter is the word need by the French themselves, I believe without much to justify it. Three creeks divide these communities from each other, Yang-Kingpang, Socobow creek, and Defence creek, between the English settlement and China. One wide thoroughfare, called "the Malco," runs through the picturesque led him to excite us all rather Shanghai out past the race course and the Horse-Bazaar into the country, and along this in the afternoon there is a stream of ponies and smart It is the Rotton Row of Shanghaixleading to the of very little value, if of any at all; everybody recountry drive the community possesses. The roads are perfect, the traffic is kept under admirable direction and control, the treets are quiet and orderly, and even the coolies are forbidden to push their great wheelburrows though the foreign settlement with angreased wheels. The third surprise of Shangnai does not dawn upon you immediately. It is a Republic—a community of nations, self-gover red, and practically independent, for it amaps its ingers politely at the Chinese authorities or isonsses any matter with them upon squal terms and it-does not besitate to differ pointedly in opinion from its own Consuls when regards their action as unwise or their nterference as unwarranted. Over the Chi nese within its borders the Municipal Council has, however, no jurisdiction. In the "Maloo there is a Magistrate's Vamen, and there the famous " Mixed Court" sits every morning, the Chinese Magistrate and one of the foreign Consuls in turn. All natives charged with offences against foreigners or foreign law are dealt with there, petty criminals being punished in the municipal prison or the chain-gang, serious offenders, or refugers from Chinese law, buing trate-in the Mixed Court is, of course, a gure-head, chiefly useful, so far as I could see in lecturing the prisoners while the foreigner made up his mind what punishment to award. In crimical cases the Mixed Court works fairly well, but in civil suits it gives rises to numerous and bitter complaints. The population of Shanghai to-day (the last census wis in 1885) is probably about 4,000 foreigners (British 1,500, Japanese 600, Portuguese 410, French 400 American 300, Spanish 250, German 250, and Chinese 175,000. These figures may be considerably-under the mark. It is curious that by the "Land Regulations." which form the Constitution of Shanghai, the Chinese are forbidden to reside or hold property within the Foreign Settlements, and yet here are those 175,000 o them affoat and ashore, and I fancy Shanghai itself would be astounded if it could be told exactly what proportion of the whole property is in their hands. There has been a good deal of talk about this, and in reply to a Osssandra who wrote to the papers that nothing could save Shanghai but amalgamation with the Chinese, a local writer produced some witty verses, telling how in a vision in the twentieth century-

VISIT TO AN INDIAN OFIUM FACTORY.

HENRY NORMAN.

On the banks of the Ganges, forty miles below Benares as the crow flies, stands the Ghazipore Factory, an opium mint, as it were, whence issue the procious cakes that are to replenish the coffers of the Indian Government. The busy season is setting in, for with April the opinm comes in from the districts after having run the gauntlet of the district officers of the Opium department, who will pass it as fit for use. Then the really serious work begins under a rousting sun. The opium arrives by challens, regiments of one hundred jars, each holding one manud, and each packed in a basket and scaled atop. The district officer andmits forms -never was such a place for forms as the Chusipore Factory-showing the quality and weight of each pot, and with the jars come a zilladar responsible for the safe carriage of the challens. their delivery, and their virginity. If any pots are broken or tampered with, as unfortunate individual called the Import Officer and appointed to work like a horse from dawn fill dowy eve must examine the z llade in charge of the challan, and refluce his statement to writing. Fancy getting any native to explain how a matka has been smashed. But the perfect flower is about as a valuable as silver.

Then all the pots have to be waighed and the weights-Calcutta Mint if you please and the beams must be daily tested. The weight of each pot is recorded on the pot, in a book, and goodness knows where else, and everyone has to sign certificates that the weighing is correct. Note: Beng-the pots large be a weighed once in the district and once in the fictory. Therefore & certain number of them are taken at random, and weighed afresh before they are opened. This is only the beginning of the long series of checks. Ill sorts of inquiries are made about light pots; and then the testing begins. Everysingle, serially numbered pot has to be tested for quality. A native called the purkhea drives his fist into the opium, rubs and smells it, and calls out the class for the benefit of the opium exeminer. A sample nicked ballyoen floreer and thamb is thrown into a jer, and if the opium examiner thinks the purkhed has said sooth, the class of the jar is marked in chalk, and every their is entered in a book. Every ten samples are put in a looked box with duplicate keys, and sent over to the laboratory for assay.
